Paper Recycling:

Making Progress Toward the 50 Percent Recovery Goal

While recycling has played an important role throughout the 300-plus year history of pulp, paper and paperboard manufacture in America, 1993 marked two particularly significant recycling milestones.

Last year, for the first time in history, more paper was recovered in the United States than was landfilled — a remarkable accomplishment made possible by the millions of Americans who take the time to separate their used paper and make it available for recovery. Last year also marked achievement of the industry's 1995 goal to recover 40 percent of all the paper Americans use — a goal reached two years ahead of schedule. And at the end of last year, the industry set its sights even higher, establishing a new goal to recover one-half of all the paper Americans use in the year 2000.

Achieving such an ambitious goal will not be easy. Already, however, America's pulp, paper and paperboard industry is investing billions of dollars in plants and equipment designed to expand utilization of recovered paper as a raw material. Recovered paper utilization continues to rise in each major sector of the industry — as does consumer demand for recycled-content paper products.

But the strong growth in paper recovery does more than just provide papermakers with a vital raw material. The millions of tons of paper Americans recover at home and in the workplace are millions of tons that don't end up in the nation's landfills — good news for the environment.

PAPER RECOVERY TODAY: Thanks to You, It's Booming

Establishing the paper industry's 40 percent paper recovery goal in 1990 marked the starting point of an unprecedented effort here in the United States to expand recovery of paper for recycling. It's an effort that's in full swing today.

Thanks to the efforts of millions of Americans who sort out recyclable paper at home and work, impressive statistics continue to mount. For example:

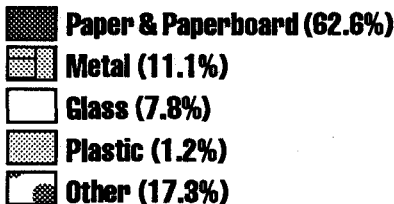

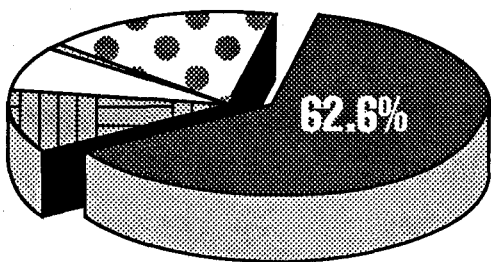

■ Last year, nearly 36 million tons of paper and paperboard were recovered in the United States — twice as much as in 1980.

- More than one of every two newspapers, 62 percent of all corrugated material and one-third of all paper and paperboard packaging (compared to 12 percent of all other packaging) are being recovered.

- Americans now recover 40 percent of all paper used — achieving the industry's 1995 recovery goal well ahead of schedule.

- In all, paper and paperboard account for more than 60 percent of all materials diverted from the municipal solid waste stream.

RECOVERED PAPER: Vital to U.S. Papermakers

U.S. papermakers' demand for recovered paper has grown alongside the dramatic growth in recovered paper supply. The availability of increasing supplies of recovered paper has provided tremendous opportunities for U.S. manufacturers to increase recycling capacity.

During the balance of this decade, U.S. papermakers plan unprecedented investments in new manufacturing capacity to increase their reliance on recovered paper as a raw material. Already, however, recovered paper is an important raw material for U.S. papermakers. Consider these statistics:

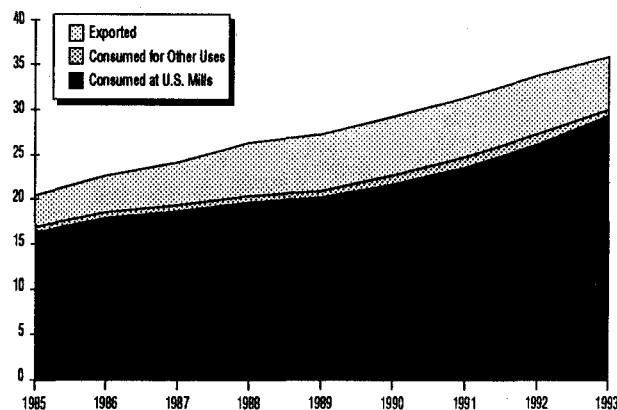

- Of the more than 500 U.S. paper and paperboard mills, 75 percent recycle some recovered paper, and 200 depend on it entirely.

- Every day, U.S. papermakers recycle enough paper to fill a 15-mile-long train of boxcars.

- At the turn of the century, recovered paper is expected to supply 40 percent of all fiber used to make paper and paperboard products — up from 25 percent in 1988.

- In the year 2000, an estimated 78 percent of recovered paper will be recycled domestically; 15 percent will be exported to foreign recyclers; and the remaining 7 percent will be reused to make such products as animal bedding, insulation, hydromulch and compost.

PAPER RECYCLING: Keeping a Valuable Resource Out of Landfills

One of the principal reasons why the paper industry set its original 40 percent paper recovery goal was to reduce the amount of paper going into America's landfills. With existing landfill space filling up and new landfills increasingly difficult to site, it became imperative that manufacturers and consumers work together to reduce the amount of materials destined for disposal. What's more, because recovered paper is such a valuable resource, increasing recovery made perfect sense for America's papermakers.

Largely as a result of this commitment to increase paper recovery, there have been — and will continue to be — significant changes in the way used paper is managed. Consider these facts:

- Even though paper consumption has increased, significantly less paper is going to landfills — 11 million fewer tons in 1993 than in 1987.
- In 1993, U.S. paper recovery saved more than 90 million cubic yards of landfill space.
- In 1993, for the first time in history, more paper was recovered in the United States than was landfilled.
- When the 50 percent goal is achieved, twice as much paper will be recovered as landfilled.

THE 50 PERCENT GOAL: How Will We Achieve It?

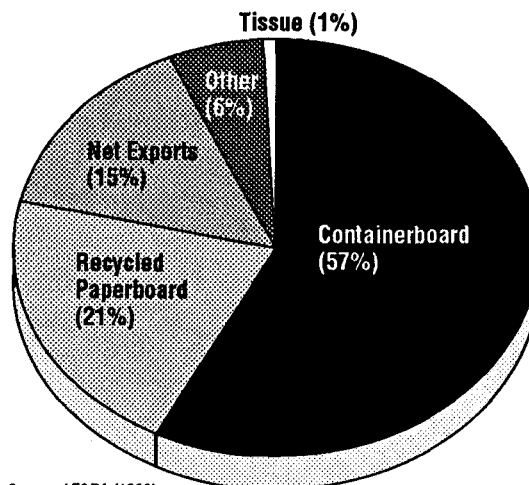

America's papermakers have set an ambitious goal — recovering 50 percent of all the paper Americans use in the year 2000. But just as public-private cooperation was the key to achieving the 40 percent target ahead of schedule, so will it be the key to achieving the new 50 percent goal.

Specifically, four things must happen:

1. Paper recovery programs must continue to grow. We've seen extraordinary growth in paper recovery programs at the local level — and equally extraordinary participation in them by millions of environmentally conscious Americans. Looking ahead, it is vitally important to realize that different types of recovered paper are suitable for recycling into different types of paper and paperboard products. The point is that all recovered paper is not the same. Continued growth in paper recovery programs — focused on recovery of source-separated grades of paper in demand by recyclers — is essential.

Where OCC Goes

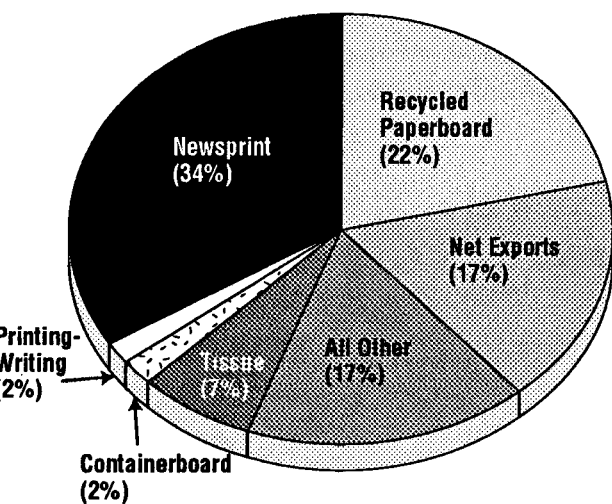

Source: AF&PA (1993)

2. U.S. paper manufacturers must make unprecedented investments in new recycling capacity. U.S. paper manufacturers need to continue to expand their recycling capacity in order to provide markets for growing supplies of recovered paper. This is occurring. In fact, during the balance of this decade, U.S. paper companies plan to invest nearly $10 billion in new manufacturing capacity that will allow them to make more recycled and recycled-content paper and paperboard.

Where ONP Goes

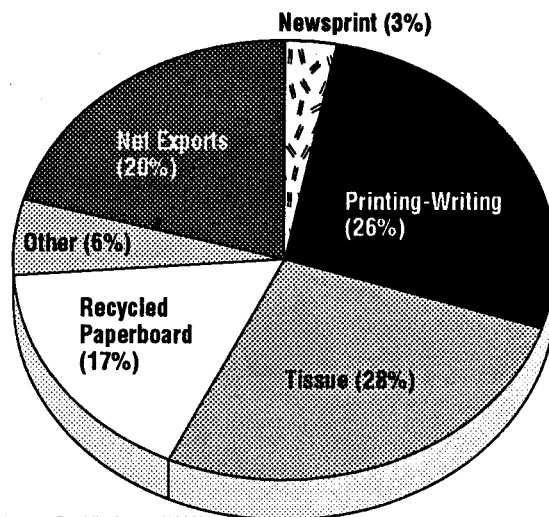

Source: AF&PA (1993)

3. Government must continue to allow a market-driven, recovery-based approach to recycling. Government must avoid market-distorting policies such as flow control, which restricts recyclers' access to recovered materials, or recycled-content mandates, which dictate where recovered fiber should go. Both policies inhibit manufacturers' flexibility and constitute barriers to efficient recycling expansion that will jeopardize achievement of the 50 percent paper recovery goal.

4. Consumers must continue to demand recycled and recycled-content paper and paperboard products. Just as consumers begin the process by source-separating their paper, they close the recycling loop by using recycled and recycled-content products. Fortunately, consumer demand for these products remains strong and, in fact, is driving recycling expansion.

Where Recovered Printing-Writing Papers Go

Source: Franklin Assoc. (1993)

The U.S. paper industry reached its 40 percent recovery goal ahead of schedule because of the dedication and cooperation of millions of Americans. Reaching the 50 percent goal — and achieving a paper recovery rate well in excess of the world average — will take even more dedication and cooperation.

All signs, however, point to success. Americans are recovering more and more paper at home and on the job — keeping millions of tons of paper out of the nation's landfills. Paper manufacturers are earmarking billions of dollars to increase their recycling capacity. American consumers continue to demand recycled paper products. With this kind of teamwork, we'll usher in the 21st century recovering fully 50 percent of all the paper Americans use — an achievement in which all of us will be able to take great pride.

Directory of U.S. Paper and Paperboard Mills Consuming Recovered Paper

The following section lists U.S. pulp, paper and paperboard mills that currently utilize recovered paper as a raw material. Some use 100 percent recovered paper to make new products; others use recovered paper as a portion of their raw material mix. You may want to contact these mills directly, or work through a local recovered paper dealer or broker, to discuss potential markets for recovered paper.

This listing contains the type(s) of recovered paper each mill uses as a raw material. The following definitions are abstracted from the Institute of Scrap Recycling Industries (ISRI) Scrap Specifications Circular 1994. The 51 grades and 33 specialty grades in this circular have been condensed in the groupings listed below:

Mixed Papers: Mixed papers, super mixed papers, office papers (if not deinked or of suitable quality to be used as a pulp substitute), magazines and catalogs, telephone directories, recycled boxboard cuttings, tissue paper converting scrap if predominantly composed of recycled fiber, mill wrappers, specialty grades and all other grades not elsewhere specified. ISRI grades 1-5, 10, 22, 23, 27 and 1S-33S.

Newspapers: Old newspapers, special news (including deink quality) over-issue news, white blank news, groundwood computer printout, publication blanks, mixed groundwood and flyleaf shavings, and coated groundwood sections. ISRI grades 6-9, 24-26, 44.

Corrugated: Old containers (both corrugated and solid fiber), container plant cuttings, kraft paper and bags, kraft bag clippings, carrier stock and carrier stock clippings. ISRI grades 11-21.

Pulp Substitutes and High-Grade Deinking: Bleached chemical grade office papers and computer printout to be deinked or of suitable quality to be used as a pulp substitute, bleached sulfite and sulfate cuttings including tissue paper converting scrap if predominantly composed of bleached chemical pulp fiber, and coated book stock. Print-free grades are reported as pulp substitutes and printed grades, if deinked, are reported as High-Grade Deinking. ISRI grades 28-43, 45-51.
